LAST EDITION.

Washington.

Senator Booth--Treasurer New--The Third-Term Question Discussed. WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.--Senator New on Booth, of California, left here last night for New York. In a conversation yesterday he stated that the assertion that he would necessarily be compelled to vacate his independent position as Senator and either go into the Republican or Democratic ranks was a mistake. He was aware that he would be alone in the Senate, but he intended to act independently and vote only for such measures as in his judgment would prove most beneficial to the country.

After discussing the condition of the division of his office in the sum of $8 each, to make good the loss of $2,000 recently discovered in the cash account of that division, is untrue. The entire amount was paid over by the Treasurer himself, and he is confident that he will yet find out where the missing $2,000 went.

Ex-Postmaster Pease, of Jackson, Missisippi, is here to explain to the President why he took ground against Governor Ames. Mr. Pease declares that before he went against Ames he came to Washington and informed the Postmaster General of his intention and asked if by doing so he would be in danger of losing his office. The Postmaster General, he says, told him to go ahead and he would stand by him, but after the election was over he was removed by a peremptory order from the President.

Mr. Pease says the course he pursued in antagonizing the policy of Gov. Ames alone prevented riot and bloodshed in Mississippi during the late election, and he feels confident of being reinstated.

The Sunday Chronicle yesterday contained a column editorial on the presidential election question, which attracted a good deal of attention and discussion in official and private circles here.

After discussing the condition of the Republican party and asserting that the party now needs to be saved just as it did when General Grant was nominated for his first and second terms, the writer says: If the Democracy deem it no wrong to history, no injustice to the Government to elect rebels to high places in official life, what we ask can be said of the Republican party, if it concludes to accept General Grant as a candidate for a third term? Would that be more impolitic than sending the rebel Vice President to Congress or in electing a number of ex-rebel Generals to the same body? The calm view of this question, when put in this light, divests it of much of the repugnance with which the sensation press has surrounded it; and now that it is evident that the old issues of the late war are the new issues about to be entered upon by an oligarchy as intolerant as that of slavery commands popular attention, we are compelled candidly to admit that we can not see how the Republican party can secure victory next year without Grant as a candidate for re-election. It can only gain a great victory on the personal merits of the man with General Sherman, because his wish General Sherman, because his Roman Catholic identities are against him. It can't nominate Sheridan because his foreign birth makes him ineligible; and there is not a civilian who could carry Pennsylvania, Ohio and New York. Charles Francis Adams is the only man who has anything to do with the matter, and a personal or political prestige to help in case of nomination. But he could not be nominated, and would be a curse no end to carry. There is a dead weight view of the question of electing a President, and the masses of the Republican party, no longer frightened by the absurd cry of a while without a doubt the position of Grant on the educational question aided the Republican party in securing the victory. Governor Hayes, after the campaign was won in Ohio, stated in the Executive Mansion in Harrisburg, Pa., while a guest of Governor Harrington, that the educational question had given the Republicans the victory in that State. It was Grant who made that question a Republican issue in a speech delivered at Des Moines.

News and Incidents of the West and Northwest.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.--Specials from Washington state that developments will soon be made involving a prominent business man of this city in the whisky trade to a very large extent, and that his exposure will be the signal for a general upheaval among those engaged in the ring, which will create an excitement on foot of said upheaval there is much excitement here. It is believed in this city that the whole report is fabricated, and there is no individual named even in whisky circles, who would answer the description, and there is no excitement over the matter save what has been created by the dispatch alluded to.

The Government officials have received information that a man named Will D. Grumway, of Chicago, reached Jefferson City, Missouri, on Thursday night, and had a confidential interview with Joyce, as the result of which Joyce immediately made the up him and draw his motion for a new trial and demand an immediate sentence. Grumway made a grand effort to suppress his name, which was only "struck" after Joyce was sentenced. A Clergyman's Horse.

The Abland (Kentucky) Journal tells the following story: "Rev. T. F. Garrett, of Prestonsburg, had the misfortune to lose his horse on the 20th ultimo, she having died of the bots. Our friend, writing home, says: 'I left her in the field and started to my appointment, getting as far as Prestonsburg, not knowing whether she would live or die, and had not been there two hours, and here came the poor creature, through the dark, having crossed the creek twice and the river once, and came right to the house where I was! Does it not seem wonderful that she should thus come three miles after being left, and I wonder if she wanted to be near me when she died? Did her instinct or misery bring her safe into the town? It is quite a mystery!'"
